was found badly injured in the areaway of a five story tenement at 1440 Park avenue early last evening. Two tenants, a man and a woman, had seen him drop to the stone pavement.

It is supposed that he fell or was thrown from the roof. No one in the building knew him. A barber, John Bell, whose shop is at the corner, said he had been at the Polo Grounds with Demarco yesterday afternoon. After the game they were separated, and Bell couldn't imagine what Demarco was doing in or near the Park avenue tenement.

Mr. Williams said that as he was going the boy asked him obes.

Mr. Williams said that as he was going up in the elevator the boy asked him whether he was bound for the Church dinner or the Eighth district dinner. This query led the Philadelphia editor to assume that the other dinner was the Eighth Assembly district dinner and a Tammany affair. In his younger days as a newspaper man in this city he said he was familiar with politics in the Eighth district and he knew how the ward politicians kept in touch with the widows and orphans, supplying a load of coal here and a job there to some boy or girl who had to help support the family.

"Those politicians sitting in the next room know their neighbors and help them. They are always in touch with them and work unceasingly with and for them."

Mr. Williams's remarks lost none of their force, in the estimation of his hearers, because "those politicians" happened to be the Eighth Masonic district dining in the adjoining banquet hall.

hearers, because "those politicians" happened to be the Eighth Masonic district dining in the adjoining hanquet hail. Francis Lynde Stetson, president of the Church Club, was too ill to preside and in his place the vice-president, George Gordon King, acted as toastmaster. Bishop Greer and Joseph Packard, the latter a lawyer of Baltimore, Md., were the other speakers. Bishop Greer said the Christian churches are better filled to-day on Sundays and other days of religious service than ever before. He said that negative teaching has lost all the force it ever possessed, and that it was his conviction that it would be better both for the Church and the people if a message came from a united Christianity.

"That will come," he declared, "not by the surrender of convictions but by that larger syncretism that comprehends them all."

inst night on the charge of taking money from the mails. Complaints that started Post Office Inspectors Jacobs and James to work on this branch station seemed to focus around Cohen.

They sent him two letters containing $1.10 each, addressed to the Magazine of Mystery.at 629 West Forty-third street. There is no such magazine and no such address, but the money was real. Last night they saw Cohen open the envelope. When he was arrested he admitted that for six months he had been taking money; in all it amounted to $560. He said he couldn't live on his $1,200 salary. Cohem is married and lives at 34 West 113th street.
